Northwest Houston State Emissions Inspection From Cherry Park Automotive

In the State of Texas, it's a law that all vehicles registered here have a comprehensive safety inspection and, depending on the county, an emissions test as well. While you might think these requirements are a nuisance, the laws are on the books to keep the cars on Texas highways safe and compliant with federal emission standards.

What The Inspections Reveal

In the Houston/Galveston area, vehicles older than 1995 will receive the Accelerated Simulation Mode (ASM) test, while newer vehicles will receive the Onboard Diagnostic (OBD 11) test. The ASM emissions test uses a dynamometer to measure exhaust emissions from the tailpipe at high and low speeds. This test picks up symptoms of engine problems such as excessive Hydrocarbons (HC), Excessive Carbon Monoxide (CO) and the Excessive Oxides of Nitrogen (NOx).

Tests for newer cars interact with their computerized systems to verify the status of the Check Engine light and interpret codes produced by three monitors in the vehicles, the Misfire, Fuel System, and Comprehensive Components. The test identifies malfunctions or problems with devices that control exhaust emission levels and points out other potentially costly problems that could also result in higher emissions.
